The Marshal visits Thaimée Table, who will return next week

Several readers (H/T Laura for the photos!) noted the arrival of a notice from the Marshal on Thaimée Table, the well-regarded Thai restaurant at 99 Third Ave. between 12th Street and 13th Street...

A similar notice — that the property is now in legal possession of the landlord — is on the front door of chef-owner Hong Thaimiee's off-shoot, Thaimiee Box, on 13th Street near Second Avenue.

There's isn't any mention of a closure on the Thaimiee website or social media properties. But there is good news for Thaimiee fans: In an email, Chef Thaimiee's business partner, Matt Bruck, said that they planned to reopen next week. And those notices from the Marshal?: "We are working it all out."

Chef Thaimiee, who previously worked in the kitchens at Jean-Georges' Spice Market and Perry Street restaurants, opened Ngam in 2012 (The Village Voice named Ngam NYC's No. 1 Thai restaurant in 2013) ... the restaurant was later renamed Thaimiee Table.

This place is a bit odd, with re-namings and multiple closings/re-openings. "Closed for renovation" (their most recent sign) is a little different than "Marshall's Possession"!

Honestly had no idea there was a new well-regarded Thai place on 3rd ave between 12th and 13th. Guess I sort of have contempt for that general area now. In my mind it's completely NYU.

The space now has a for lease sign.
